Beamer announces football coaching staff changes
Loeffler, Grimes, Moorehead join full-time staff; Stinespring named recruiting coordinator

BLACKSBURG - Three coaches who bring a combined two national titles, a Super Bowl championship, 11 BCS bowl game appearances, six conference titles and five NFL Playoff appearances as either coaches or players comprise the new members of the Virginia Tech football staff, as announced Friday by head football coach Frank Beamer. Joining the program are former Temple and Auburn offensive coordinator Scot Loeffler, former Auburn offensive line coach Jeff Grimes and former Stanford wide receivers coach and Super Bowl champion Aaron Moorehead.

Beamer also announced that Bryan Stinespring, a respected recruiter around the Commonwealth of Virginia and beyond, will move from the role of offensive coordinator to the responsibilities as Virginia Tech's recruiting coordinator, as well as maintaining his coaching duties of the tight ends. Stinespring was the lead recruiter of five former Hokie players currently in the NFL (starter James Anderson, Pro Bowler Kam Chancellor, Pro Bowler DeAngelo Hall, Darryl Tapp and second-team All-Pro selection David Wilson), as well as several other prominent players on the upcoming team, including Logan Thomas, Andrew Miller, Ryan Malleck, Demetri Knowles and Trey Edmunds.

These new hires fill the vacancies on the staff created by the departures of Curt Newsome, Mike O'Cain and Kevin Sherman.

Loeffler will serve as the offensive coordinator and also coach the quarterbacks. Grimes will coach the offensive line, while Moorehead will coach the receivers. All three officially begin work on Friday, Jan. 25.
